Luxury Gardens is a company I came up with that sells plants throughout the world. It's difficult for a good garden center to expand very far. If one was capable of providing a large selection of plants to people all over the world it would be neat. I chose a simple layout and neutral, earthy tones when designing the website.

My homepage is obviously very easy to find and it noted by the usual index.html.

For my jQuery effects i used Lightbox for an image gallery on the homepage and a fluid bar graph to represent inventory on that page.

The content is checked with modernizer and has fallback for out of date browsers.

On the homepage I have an interactive image gallery and an html5 video. On the 'inventory' page I've included an animated bar graph and on the 'find us' page there is an interactive map.

All photographs have been taken by myself. The images for the interactive map were provided.
